Ajit Pai (or Whom it may concern)

FCC Chairman

Dear Mr. Pai,

As a concerned citizen of the wonderful United States of America, I would like to express my concern about relaxing the rules and regulations of Net Neutrality. As horrible as it sounds, I spend several hours a day on the internet whether it's playing games with my friends, reading content that interests me or just watching videos. I don't believe that relaxing the rules and regulations that have been in place for years is the answer to our internet struggles. I feel as though losing Net Neutrality would do more harm than good to customers and allow corporations to take advantage of us. We've already lost our privacy and we stand to lose our choice and quality of service. I understand that there is no easy ruling when it comes to the internet but I do hope you continue to hold the people's wishes in your mind and do what we the people believe is the right choice no matter how hard that choice is to make.

Hoping for a bright future for you, the FCC, the internet and its users as a whole,

Brett Waldon
